Grenoble-Isère Airport or Aéroport de Grenoble-Isère (IATA: GNB, ICAO: LFLL), is an airport serving Grenoble which is situated 2.5 km north-northwest of Saint-Étienne-de-Saint-Geoirs and 40 km northwest of Grenoble, both communes in the Isère, département of France. Grenoble is a city in southeastern France, at the foot of the French Alps where the river Drac joins the Isère. Located in the Rhône-Alpes region, Grenoble is the capital of the department of Isère. The proximity of the mountains, as well as its size, has led to the city being known in France as the “Capital of the Alps”.

Formerly known as Grenoble-Saint-Geoirs Airport, the appellation, Isere, refers to the department of Isère. Coach links connect the airport with the centre of Grenoble. Transisere network.

The Grenoble Isere Airport handled 456,062 passengers in 2009. A campus of the École nationale de l’aviation civile is also located at the airport.
